

Diving in Noronha

The Fernando de Noronha Archipelago is a Marine National Park located 200 miles off the northeastern coast of Brazil. The archipelago is a world-class dive destination and a heavenly retreat for underwater pleasures, with warm (28C) and clear (with 30 meters visibility) waters. Due to its open ocean location, which provides pelagic fish and ocean mammals a refuge, and the strict protections placed on this national park by the Brazilian environmental protection agency, we can guarantee the fish will be there when you are.

The dive sites include a wreck dive, caverns, amazing coral and volcanic rock formations, an array of reef sharks, rare green and comb turtles of up to 660 pounds, schooling barracuda, all kinds of rays and schooling reef fishes of every kind and color, and wild dolphins. The best conditions are normally between Nov and July.
